In DC now for a while walking around doing a little scouting and..

it seems to be a big party atmosphere among Trump supporters. Everyone in a good mood.

I am worried this will all be for nothing if people don't actually get angry. Maybe it's just the initial euphoria of realizing you are not alone and crazy.

We can't accept half measures on this. We aren't doing this every 4 fucking years. We need to end this shit this week.

On the plus side I think turnout is going to be great!

12 I've been praying for those unfortunate Congress critters who may be torn to pieces. Every do I get a vision of Louie Gohmert playing whack a mole on his colleagues with a bourbon I I'm not much for prophetic stuff, but one can hope. Please Lord, protect Louie and keep his of Old Crow from breaking, as we'll all need it to toast 1776.

▼ Perhaps this is what you need to have:

<https://theconservativetreehouse.com/2016/10/24/cold-anger-the-corporate-u-s-media-has-weaponized-against-us/>

Read the article if you want to know what is driving a significant number of us.

Most of us Patriots have it. We understand all to well. However, we will not allow raw emotions to cloud our vision, upend our plans.

What is spoken within that article is called "Cold Anger".

Those people smiling and having a good time like at a party? Much like an abused spouse having a great time with friends before going home to their abuser and saying good-bye in a long prepared plan of action.

The party atmosphere is an illusion. What is gathering in DC is a giant powder keg. Should the globalists be stupid about it...they will arrogantly spark it off.

If wiser heads prevail, the anger gets channeled into constructive means.

And we won again November 3rd 2020

Not by being angry but by letting antifa rage out and change peoples minds.

How exactly do you suggest people "be angry"? Should they say "I'm angry" repeatedly? P grimace? Complain about everything that is bothering them?

And where should they direct this anger? The Trump supporters around them? The ones they

You have no idea how people feel. Just how they're acting.

Sounds like you're around a bunch of stable minded adults who know how to manage their emotions.

Not seeing the problem. You should change your perspective. You sound like an angsty teenager who thinks they're deep and I think you're better than that.

17 Exactly.

Another way to look at it - the boxer doesn't start throwing punches two days before he gets in the ring.

All is fine right now. Patriots should be happy to be there joining up with each other. How could you not be pleased to be around thousands of other Trump supporters?

If they weren't pissed, they wouldn't even be there.

People just get there, are happy they made it and are taking a breather. As more folks begin to arrive, people will begin to converse and the moods will change especially as the evening rolls on. People are just happy now to see they are not alone and are among other patriotic Americans. That will change when louder voices start mixing it up.

to violence very quickly.

Speaking from experience my advice to you right now is to stay relaxed as possible and keep you mind focused on real and practical things in front of you. Enjoy the company you are in and try to make some new friends. If your anxiety is overwhelming and you can't shake it, find someone to help in someway. That always works.

Right now, patriots making friends, forming bonds and otherwise connecting is very important. This is the perfect time to do that.
